nouncing Mr. Astron's death, received by Manager Baldwin Monday afternoon between Manager Baldwin Monday atternoon between 2 and 3 o'clock.

It there were any facts in to-day's cable-grains which might throw light upon the myrtery Mr. Baldwin sedulously refrained from giving them to the press, having once more surrounded himself with the cuspomary Astoresque reticence.

THE EVENIMO WORLD reporter saw the "Clement" cablegram in Mr. Baldwin's hands yestetday morning. It was on a blank of the Anglo-American Company.

At that time so report bad reached here of the failsty of the report of Mr. Astor's death.

At that time so report had reached here of the falsity of the report of Mr. Astor's death. Mr. Baidwin then read to the reporter the body of the famous cablegram, as follows: "Mr. Adams directs me to say that after a relipse Mr. Astor died to-day between 4 and 5 o'clock. Send notices to the papers."

Manager Baidwin did not then read the name of the signer, which the reporter saw was in a single word. When the reporter saw was in a single word. When the reporter saked who sent the message, Mr. Baidwin remarked in an offhand way:

"Oh, it was sent by Mr. Adams's direction by somebody in the office over there."

That somebody, it now transpires, was one the lement."

when the report came in later in the morning that Mr. Astor was not dead, the reporter again called at the Astor office and questioned Manager Baldwin as to the heartity of the sender of the cablegram forwarded "by Mr. Adams's directions."
"Oh, we know him. He is a clerk in Mr. Adams's office," said Mr. Baldwin, but he relisted to tell the clerk's name.
It was then beginning to appear that the

"Oh, we know him. He is a clerk in Mr. Adam's soffice," said Mr. Baldwin, but he refused to tell the clerk's name.

It was then beginning to appear that the cablegram was bogus, and Mr. Baldwin was getting cautious and growing reticent.

It is said that a man named Clement did work and may possiolly now be working in the loadon office. That much was admitted in the Astor office to-day.

"Clement "is not known personally to any body in the Astor offices bero, but his name is tamiliar at this end of the big estate.

Were it not for the fact that the "Clement" cablegram was received in New York by Mr. Baldwin, the publication of Mr. Astor's death would never have been made in this city.

It was that cablegram which, by its orders to print death notices, sent sexton Maurer to the different newspaper offices with the notices of Mr. Astor's death.

After these notices were left with the advertising departments, the Associated Pressiturished cablegrams to the newspaper of his cless of Mr. Astor's death.

Manager Baldwin declined to answer, London Manager Adams's statements as to the identity of the man "Clements."

"Whatever Mr. Adams choses to, say he is at liberty to do so," said Mr. Raldwip. "I have written to Mr. Astor all the details as far as this end of the story is concerned, and anything further I have to say I shall say to Mr. Astor."
